

feed her and later held a council of sagamores and negotiate her ransom with a stated price ("twenty pounds"). Some shave her head, offer bread, tobacco, hood and scarf.

- Moralized portrayal is shown when they escape, the captors often appear as God's rod of chastisement rather than independent agents

How lessons learnt reflect Puritan beliefs?

- Providence ~~strengthens~~ Disasters, reverses, food found and final deliverance are read as direct acts of God: "The Lord renewed my strength", "strange providence of God in preserving the heathen", change of heart among captors so she can return home is "a remarkable change of providence"

- She constantly quotes the Bible and applies verses typologically to her own "wilderness" trial.

- She interprets suffering as what she "wanted" to purge vanity and teach reliance on God ("it is good
